Description

Democracy has always been subject to violence and war in Africa. It is a problem of differences in political views about the genesis, organization and operation of political power. Democratic Republic of Congo, for example, the problems that were originated Parliament between 1960 and 1965 were the basis for a huge loss of industries. This country had nearly 10,000 industrial enterprises in the 1950s, only to find less than 150 in July 2010. There are also in Africa, from 1960 to 1980, 41 successful coups, 24 attempted coups and a military invasion. Yet Africa has in its stem, a democratic culture better suited to the realities social, cultural and historical colonization could not afford to break. In addition, a confusing wave of democratization has invaded the continent in the 1990s, the results of the course disputed, and as such will not stop Africans to develop their Constitutions copying, paraphrasing and compiling only constitutions of the West. We need to find a definitive solution.
